

Nikki Kimbleton is an award-winning journalist with more than 25 years of experience.

Kimbleton began her professional career during her junior year at Troy University in Alabama, working as an anchor and reporter in both Montgomery and Birmingham covering pivotal stories throughout the state.

In 2004, she moved home to Jacksonville, FL to be closer to family.

Nikki spent 13 years at WJXT where she was a viewer favorite from the moment she started. She was consistently voted "Favorite Newscaster" by readers of multiple publications year after year. While there, she followed her passion; to help people in the community, to tell positive stories and to become deeply involved in charities that make a difference.

Volunteering is one of Nikki's passions, she has served on various charitable boards, including the Child Cancer Fund, Eldersource, and the Cattysack Ranch. She and her husband Scott run a non-profit, "Martha's Mix", that benefits feeding local elementary students through the Blessings in a Backpack charity. She also played an active role in making animal cruelty a felony in Alabama.

Nikki and Scott live in Jacksonville with their son Brady.
